

Module 10: Elevator

Design Approach

To create an object oriented simulation using the provided csv file, I relied on the following STL data structures: `std::thread`, `std::shared_ptr`, `std::list`, `std::map`, `std::set`, and `std::mutex`. These libraries enabled me to create different threads to parse the CSV file and allow the four elevators to move simultaneously. To calculate average travel and wait time for the simulation and keep track of the wait time and travel time per passenger I relied on the `std::chrono` STL data structure.

I created four classes to be used along with the STL data structures – Passenger, Floor, PassengerQueuer, and Elevator. I created a fifth class called SimLogger which uses the `spdlog` library to create and write to log files. Due to the lengthy duration of the simulation, I created five separate log files for logging four elevator actions and logging the parser status along with simulation results.

My Passenger class contains 8 public functions and 3 private variables which are used to access and set the passenger's requested and original floor, as well as accessing and setting time variables which are later used to calculate passenger's wait and travel time. Passenger class relies on `int` and `std::chrono::time_point` to complete these functionalities.

My Floor class contains 5 public functions and 5 private variables which are used to access and access and modify the queue of passengers waiting on that specific floor, check queue size, and initializes the floorID number. Floor class relies on `std::list` for the queue, `std::mutex` when modifying or accessing queue data to prevent thread conflicts, and `int` to set floorID.

My PassengerQueuer class contains 8 public functions, 2 protected functions, and 10 private variables utilized to parse the given CSV file and access and modify a map of Floor objects to keep track of waiting passengers. The class relies on `std::list` and `std::set` to keep track of waiting Passengers and their requests, `std::map` which stores all the Floor objects created based on parsed file, `bool` which checks if parsing is complete, `std::shared_ptr` for SimLogger class to set log messages, and `std::mutex` when modifying or accessing map data to prevent thread conflicts, and `int` to keep track of number of passengers. There is another `int` variable which stores the last time a passenger was queued, it is used within the public `beginQueue` function to wait a certain amount of time prior to adding the next passenger by using `std::this_thread::sleep_for`.

The Elevator class contains 2 public functions, 6 protected functions, 15 private variables utilized to invoke the elevator's movement by checking for waiting passengers and whether the elevator is empty or not. The class relies on `std::mutex` when accessing or modifying simulation, `dropOffRequests` and passenger in elevator data; `std::shared_ptr` for SimLogger class to set log messages; `std::list` and `std::set` to keep track of Passengers in elevator and their requested floors to be dropped off at; `std::multimap` which holds Passenger objects for keeping track of elevator's inside of the elevator; and enum class Movement variables which are used to keep track of elevator's direction and status. In order to simulate seconds for elevator movement, I used `std::this_thread::sleep_for` within the `moveFloor` function for elevator movement between floors and when stopping.

The main thread is implemented in the `SimulationRun.cpp` file. The main thread initializes the five threads and the five `SimLogger` objects for each of the threads. I also initialized a `std::shared_ptr<std::mutex>` and `std::shared_ptr<std::list>` which is used to calculate the average wait and travel time and lock when accessing this data to prohibit conflicts between the elevator threads. These variables are parameters to the elevator class and used within the class when dropping off passengers. Passengers are added to the list for calculation later within the main thread. The results of the average wait and travel time is then outputted to the `queuer` log file.

Test and Verification

To perform testing and verification of all my files, I relied on the debugging and the logger outputs. Based on these results, I can conclude that the spdlog is properly creating and updating log file, CSV file is being properly parsed, the elevators are moving independently based on the passengers being queued, and the elevators are not conflicting with each other, and all passengers have been picked up and dropped off. NOTE: That the elevator movement speed was set to 2 seconds for testing.

One example of a test performed was to parse 2 lines of the CSV file which would queue only two passengers. For this test, I only declared one elevator thread to verify that the elevator class picks up passengers along the way and drops the passengers off. The corresponding results are described and shown below and highlighted in red.

Another example of a test performed was to parse the CSV file and verify that my elevators would move independently when prospective passengers are waiting. For this test, I declared 4 elevator threads and verified that the elevators moved without thread conflict. The corresponding results are described and shown below and highlighted in red.

Simulation Analysis & Results

After running the full simulation twice for 10 second elevator movement and 5 second elevator movement, I received the following average wait and travel time results:

- 5 Second Elevator Movement
 - Average wait time is: 166.123752 seconds
 - Average travel time is: 325.778443 seconds
- 10 Second Elevator Movement
 - Average wait time is: 363.678643 seconds
 - Average travel time is: 678.632735 seconds

Compared to the 10 second elevator movement, the 5 second elevator movement times reduced the average wait time by 54.33% and average travel time by 51.97%. The proposed idea to speed up the elevators to be a great improvement to minimize the complaints. See the exact calculations below:

$$\begin{aligned} \text{Reduction} &= \frac{363.678643 - 166.123752}{363.678643} \times 100 & \text{Reduction} &= \frac{678.632735 - 325.778443}{678.632735} \times 100 \\ &= \frac{197.554891}{363.678643} \times 100 \approx \boxed{54.33\%} & &= \frac{352.854292}{678.632735} \times 100 \approx \boxed{51.97\%} \end{aligned}$$

The log files for each of these simulation runs are provided below.
